

HOW WE USE COOKIES

This policy complies with the general legal framework on personal data protection, explains the cookies, and details how our users can manage their cookie preferences.

What is a cookie?

An Internet cookie (also known as a cookie) is a small file made up of digits and letters which, when you access a site, is saved in the browser you use (e.g. Internet Explorer, Chrome, Mozilla, Safari) and stored on your computer, phone, tablet, or any other device through which you access that site. Cookies do not contain software, viruses or spyware and will not access the information on the hard drive of the user whose device they were installed on. Although cookies are stored in the memory of the user's device, they cannot access other information on that device.

What cookies are there on our website?

- Technical cookies or functional cookies – These cookies are essential for the functionality of our website, and the user cannot deactivate them.
- Preference cookies – used, for example, to select the language the website is displayed on.
- Statistical cookies – this type of cookies offers anonymous information about the website users (e.g. traffic, number of visits etc.)

How can you manage your cookie options?

You can opt to delete the cookies at any time, using the “Privacy” options in the Settings category. Please select the type of browser you use from the list below, click on the link to access the settings page, and follow the indicated steps to configure these settings.
